Wrongful dismissal trial set for 2017

BY FRANK DABBS
 MVP Staff

The provincial court small claims trial of former Didsbury CAO Roy Brown's allegation that he was wrongfully dismissed in 2015 will go to trial April 26, 2017.

The matter will be heard before a provincial court civil judge in Calgary on April 26, 27 and 28.

The trial had been scheduled for one day on April 28, 2016 in Didsbury.

However Judge E. J. Creighton ordered the change of venue to Calgary and a trial on three consecutive days to accommodate a joint request by the lawyers for both Brown and the Town of Didsbury.

In a written submission, Brown's lawyer Kenneth Reh and the town's lawyer Justin Denis said that 14 witnesses are likely to be called necessitating a trial of more than one day.

In his statement of claim, Brown is claiming $80,000 plus interest "under the Judgment Interest Act," but "abandons that part of (the) claim that exceeds the financial jurisdiction of the court."

There is a $50,000 limit on provincial court of Alberta civil judgments.

The $80,000 claim is made up of $50,666.67 for wrongful termination or breach of contract, $5,000 for lost benefits and $25,000 for "aggravated and/or punitive damages."

"Counsel agree that it is not possible to hear the matter in a single day. There is great risk the trial would be bifurcated with potentially long gaps between hearing dates," Reh and Denis wrote in their request to the court.

"Bifurcating the trial would be inconvenient to counsel and the parties, and splitting the evidence over two or more single-hearing days - separated by weeks if not months - could result in prejudice to the parties," wrote the two lawyers.

The claim alleges that in June 2015, "Mr. Brown was placed on disability leave due to health issues (and) during his illness leave certain members of council commenced a campaign to discredit, embarrass and humiliate Mr. Brown."

On Oct. 8, he "provided his doctor's confirmation that he was fit and able to return to work and that he would do so on October 13."

He was advised by email Oct. 9 and by letter Oct. 12 that he was being placed on leave pending an investigation into "accusations of malfeasance."

The two parties exchanged correspondence in October and November. Brown declined to meet with Town of Didsbury officials and provided written responses to what he considers the "false allegations" against him.

Brown was then terminated.

Council declines suicide awareness stickers

BY FRANK DABBS
 MVP Staff

Didsbury town council has rescinded its decision to allow suicide awareness decals on town fire trucks at the request of the volunteer fire department.

The decals, displaying a 1-800 suicide hot line, were supplied to the fire department last year from the Didsbury Car Club organizers of the first annual Suicide Awareness Car Cruz.

Council at the time passed a motion granting permission to place the decals on the trucks.

At its May 24 meeting council rescinded that motion on the advice of fire chief Craig Martin, a decision that means the existing decals will be removed.

"A year ago, the department had just lost one of its own to suicide," said a town councillor who asked not to be named.

"It was tough for them to decline the offer. In the emotions of the moment it seemed appropriate."

"A year later there is a different perspective," the councillor said.

The second annual car cruz is set for July 16.

Parents of six-month-old with rare condition ask for help

BY PATRICIA RILEY
MVP Staff

When six-month-old Lacey Long's parents first noticed her head was shaped abnormally, they thought it was just from birth.

They later found out she has a rare condition called Lambdoid Synostosis – a rare form of Craniosynostosis that requires surgery.

Her mom Sarah said she had never heard of the condition before. After doing some research, she found out it's as rare as one in 300,000 births.

"We knew Lacey's head was not perfectly shaped and figured, like most babies, that it was from the birth and it would fix itself. We were wrong," said Sarah.

Lacey was born prematurely at 33 weeks and was kept in the hospital for four weeks before being diagnosed with Lambdoid Synostosis.

Lambdoid Synostosis is when the lambdoid suture in the back of the skull fuses prematurely, which limits space for the brain to grow.

"This causes the growth of the skull and brain to overcompensate for lost movement and shift the back of the skull to one side, resulting in a sweeping deformity of the overall head shape," explained Sarah.

She said the fusion is on the right side of the back of Lacey's head, causing it to grow in only one direction – to the left.

"Her head will continue to grow like this until she has surgery to sever the fusions," she said, adding the condition has also caused problems with her left ear and eye.

"Her head shape deformity has become more and more noticeable as she grows. It just gets bigger and bigger on the one side."

She said Lacey cannot undergo surgery until she is seven to nine months old.

"Lacey has to be strong enough and old enough to sustain this massive surgery and the amount of blood loss," she said.

As part of the process, Lacey will have to wear a series of custom-made cranial molding helmets for up to one year after the surgery.

Although the surgery is covered through Alberta Health Care, the Long family has been faced with several other associated costs, like gas and parking for appointments.

They will continue to have appointment-associated costs as Lacey will have several follow-up appointments after the surgery to monitor her progress with the cranial molding helmets.

Sarah's husband Brent is the sole provider of their family of six. They have three other children aged two, seven and 11.

Brent, a self-employed construction contractor, has had to take time off work for Lacey's needs and has also struggled to find work in Alberta's current economy over the past few months.

Sarah said Lacey's condition has caused the family a lot of stress and they are nervous for her surgery because it isn't one that's performed often.

"It does make me nervous," she said as she wiped away tears.

"We are very worried about the future and the potential and long-lasting neurological effects from this disorder and how her disability may impair her life and delay her development."

She said Lacey doesn't seem to be in pain but her neck gets sore often because of the weight on the back left side of her head.

"These past few months have been a rollercoaster of serious and life-threatening events, worry and emotions," she said.

"It affects everyone in the family. My kids have to think about this every day. They have to see Lacey – they know this is coming up. They're worried," she said.

"It's put a lot of stress and strain on us and our ability to be able to do things. It feels like we're constantly going and we don't have time to do the normal family things."

The Longs moved to Carstairs from Didsbury in September and were living in B.C. prior to that.

Without much family in the area and not knowing many people, they decided it was time to ask for help and set up a Go Fund Me account online for financial donations.

"We had no other option. We had to swallow our pride and do it," said Sarah.

They are also hosting a fundraiser superhero and princess party at the Zion Evangelical Church in Didsbury on June 12 from 2 to 5:30 p.m.

Special guests will include Captain America, Spiderman, The Little Mermaid and Rapunzel.

Kids are encouraged to dress as their favourite superhero or princess and prizes will be given for best costumes.

The event will also include face painting, bouncy castles, a silent auction, and Boston Pizza will be serving pizza by the slice.

The event is free but there is a $5 per person suggested donation for the Long family.

"She's our little superhero but she's also our princess," said Sarah. "This event isn't going to raise a ton of money but it will help us get through. We just hope people come out and enjoy time with their family."

They are also planning a Master Chef event for Aug. 7 at the Barcelona Tavern in Calgary.

There will be eight Master Chef contestants, including Season 2 contestant Tammy Wood, cooking dinner for attendees of the event.

A fundraiser at Westglen School by student Emma Rose Danby raised $430 to help care for the animals displaced by the Fort McMurray wildfire.

Danby conducted a hat day. Students paid a dollar to wear a hat all day in school. She also held sold goodies she baked during two evenings late into the night.

"She received tremendous support from many students, teachers, and the We Day school leadership group," said her mother Sari.

Danby raised and delivered $430 to the Edmonton SPCA, which took in more than 900 animals from Fort McMurray and is currently still housing well over 100.

She said the fundraising event raised awareness and encouraged others to do what they can to help out.

Museum pie social raises over $800

BY FRANK DABBS
MVP Staff

On a flawless, sun-bathed June 4 afternoon, approximately 92 people attended the annual Didsbury Museum pie social and ticket sales plus donations reached $813.

"Nineteen volunteers, cut & carried pies, served coffee, tea and lemonade, greeted our visitors, operated the model trains, washed dishes, and had an opportunity to visit with our guests," said museum chair Frankie Kelly.

The museum coffee room was bright and cheery decorated with red and white Canadian flags and guests enjoyed pie while listening to the music of Emily Fulkert and her group of musicians," Kelly said.

"Thirteen bakers baked over 30 delicious home-made pies including carrot, chocolate cream, lemon, apple, banana cream, sour cream raisin, rhubarb custard, ru-barb & raisin, & coconut cream," she added.

The museum raised $638 from the sales of pies, and $175 from donations. Kelly reach out to thank Pat's Greenhouse for its generous donation to the event.

Guests had an opportunity to explore the Museum and see the Historical Photographs restored by Cheryl Beck and presented by Kevin Bentley, Kelly said.

"Our seniors especially enjoyed this display as they could chat and reminisce about businesses and people who were a part of Didsbury's past.

It was also a pleasure to have the photograph art work on display from an emerging young local artist Anne Crowe, said Kelly. Crowe is graduating from Grade 12 this month and intends to attend SAIT to study Business and further her Phototography career.

"Our train guys always enjoy chit chatting with our Museum visitors and sharing their knowledge about trains and model train building," Kelly said.

She thanked to all the museum's volunteers, bakers, and guests who supported the fundraising event.

"We very much appreciated your continued support," Kelly said.

Moral chaos overtakes assisted dying law

BY FRANK DABBS
MVP Staff

Effective Monday, June 6, Canadians and their physicians must make, case-by-case, end of life decisions in the absence of law to direct them.

This applies in Didsbury as much as anywhere else in Canada.

This legal chaos is the result of a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada in February 2015 to strike down a law that criminalized participation in assisted suicide.

The court set June 6, 2016 as the deadline for the federal government to enact a new law to correct the injustice of legally withholding doctor assisted suicide from critically ill Canadians who faced "severe and intolerable" suffering.

Last week, the House of Commons passed Bill C-14 which provides that Canadians seek a doctor's assistance to end their life when they suffer from a "grievous and irredeemable" medical condition that leaves them in a state of "irreversible decline" when natural death is "reasonably foreseeable."

The bill is now bogged down in debate in the Senate - an institution with zero moral authority now holding up the legal resolution of the most sensitive moral and legal question of the day.

The Alberta government has added to the fog with its hastily prepared guidelines for its dealings with the federal government on this matter.

The matter now defaults to a literally lawless situation in which it is up to a willing physician and a willing patient, surrounded by a (hopefully) willing family - to opt for assisted dying.

When Bill C-14 finally becomes law it will face a period of legal review.

Already the law has been challenged in Alberta where the Court of Appeal, in reviewing an assisted death request, noted that the 2015 Supreme Court ruling does not say a patient asking a doctor for help with dying does not need to be suffering from a terminal illness.

I have had close friends with terminal illnesses whose medical suffering was so excruciating that I could not counter argue their wish to die.

I have had the closest of loved ones who rejected out of hand the option of assisted dying until cancer, with its pain, had run its course.

As many, perhaps most, other adult Canadians I know first hand how a well-crafted assisted dying law could be merciful, kind and loving.

Equally as grave as the legal crisis we find ourselves in this week is the moral chaos that this situation creates.

Canada has become a nation without a moral compass. A disturbing number of citizens consider the idea of shared moral compasses intrusive.

A good assisted dying law needs a moral and ethical compass because it is a moral and ethical choice to make such a law.

It should protect medical practitioners who decline to be involved in it.

It should protect a patient's choice to rely on it when their physician declines to give the relief the law would offer.

These are also moral and ethical choices.

Moral and ethical issues belong in the public arena not in some back room.

To fully address them, however, society needs a moral compass.

Practicums for bureaucrats and boot camps for prisoners

The Dutch have a saying: "when farmers don't complain any more, the end of days has come." Today is a rainy day so I have time to do my share of complaining to make sure the wheels of the world keep turning.

I believe all bureaucrats should have to do practical work for one year in those departments they work in like farming, fisheries, forestry and others. Many students also do a practicum in their chosen field.

A prison term should start with a boot camp and then work camps to help pay the over $100,000 it costs the taxpayers to keep a person in jail for a year.

We implant migratory birds with locating devices.

Jailbirds should have the option to be implanted to make sure they stay on the right path during their work periods outside of prison.

Prisoners that have learned to work hard would quickly find a job when released and not likely re-offend.

A prison farm should be re-opened at Bowden so the prisoners can raise all their food.

Prisoners could build their own portable work camps from shipping containers or outdated oil well drilling camps. They could then work to help make communities safer from fire and flood disasters.

Show & shine coverage shocks and disappoints

I am writing to comment on the Didsbury Show & Shine coverage in the Didsbury Review the week following the event. I have to say I was shocked and disappointed of the coverage and fully expected to see a double middle page with photos and interviews.

It was one of Didsbury's largest attended car shows that I can remember and the paper did not reflect this at all. The Didsbury Review is not the newspaper I remember and I cannot help wonder why it has gotten smaller.

I know the newspaper runs on advertising dollars and times are tough but those advertising dollars need to be shared equally between the papers in my opinion. If the size matters because of stopping subscriptions and charging for the paper then I say go back to paying for the paper by the user as well.

Maybe combine the paper with Carstairs. I enjoyed the paper when it featured news from both communities a couple of weeks ago.

I still like having and reading the newspaper and not everyone wants to read it online.

I think the paper could do better and just because it is owned by a large company shouldn't make a difference to me. The advertising dollars should be shared equally regardless of community size and I think that is the problem here.

The businesses in Didsbury give and support a great deal in this community and the newspaper shouldn't rely on them to prop up the paper as well. I look forward to a comment if there is room in the paper for it.
